Cartoon Network LEGO has become more than the moon rovers and pirate ships we used to build thirty years ago. LEGOs come in movie and TV themed, so fans can make their own models of Hogwarts or Endor at home. But LEGOs have also jumped on TV cartoons, with original storylines and tie-in toys that children of all ages find irresistible. This guide pulls together the best TV cartoons LEGO has to offer, with brick incident tiles of the originality and character for each one. LEGO Star Wars returns in epic style with YODA CHRONICLES, a thrilling, funny and action-new LEGO Star Wars story told in three TV specials! TM & © 2013 Lucasfilm Ltd. All rights are preserved. Used by authorization. Cartoon Network The LEGO Star Wars video game has sold more than 30 million units. No doubt based on that success, LEGO has made smart moves to bring the style and humor of those games to Cartoon Network for a Star Wars animated series. Revenge of the Brick (2005) is a spoof five-minute animated short. Mostly cartoons show Kashyyk's above and above-ground battles. Mark Hamill, original Luke Skywalker, co-director. The Quest for R2-D2 (2009) is a short animated film that follows R2 when he throws away Tatooine in a Clone Wars battle. As soon as Count Dooku and Asajj Ventress are about to dismantle him, Anakin and Ahsoka come to save the droid. Bombad County (2010) is a short animated parody of the first three Star Wars films. The cartoon stars Jar Jar Binks and Boba Fett. We find out what they did when the protagonists were busy fighting in the war. Padawan Menace (2011) was the first special film to air on Cartoon Network. In this episode, Yoda is taking his Padawans on a field trip, when one of them makes out with his ship. Plus, C-3PO and R2-D2 are left babysed, but find they are not up to task. The Empire Strikes Out (2012) takes place shortly after death Explode. Luke has a secret mission to Naboo that is thwarted by throngs of fans. Meanwhile, DARTH Vader had to prove himself to the Emperor when competing with DARTH Maul. Yoda Chronicles includes three different animated specials: The Phantom Clone, Menace of the Sith and Attack of the Jedi. First, Yoda and his Padawans must fight to stop the creation of a super weapon. But when they fail, DARTH Sidious uses the power of his new Sith copy for evil. Eventually, JEK discovers he may want to fight for the good people. Which side will he choose? See also: See more of LEGO 'Ninjago: Masters of Spinjitzu'. Cartoon Network Ninjago: Masters of Spinjitzu follows the training and adventures of Kai, Jay, Zane, and Cole. Sensei Wu must guide the ninja not only in their martial arts training, but also in the lessons of life. Nya, Kai's sister, is not a ninja, but she fights using her flaming dagger. She also has a altered i altered, Samurai X. The first season finds four ninjas fighting the Dark Lord Garmadon. They are also obsessed with a prophecy that says a ninja will rise above others to become the Green Ninja, who is destined to defeat Garmadon. When Garmadon's son, Lloyd, is kidnapped by snakes, Sensei Wu instructs them to save him. At the end of the season, everyone is surprised when the identity of the Green Ninja is revealed. Season two found Lloyd in training with Sensei Wu. This time all five ninjas must defeat Garmadon, who has created a golden super weapon. They must also defeat the Overlord, who infects everyone with darkness. Throughout the second season, we find out who will become the next spinjitzu master. The third season premiered on January 29, 2014, with Lloyd as the Golden Ninja defending the city of Nijago. The Ninjas are recalled to act as the spirit of the defeated Overlord that has infected Ninjago's grid and is using all available technologies to exact his revenge on Lloyd, the Ultimate Spinjitzu Master. Nowhere is it safe for ninjas when they are hunted by the evil robot army of the Digital Overlord, the Nindroids. The only opportunity for the ninja to survive is to learn the secrets of techno blades. Ninjago's deep mythology and laugh-out-loud humor: Masters of Spinjitzu make this cartoon a success for Cartoon Network. LEGO/Cartoon Network The Kingdom of Chima was once a pure and natural paradise that has turned into a land of unrest. The best friends, Laval the lion and the crocodile cragger, have turned into enemies. In the woods, vehicles are charging against each other in epic hand-to-hand combat. Animal tribes are fighting for super-powerful natural energy called Chi - which is a source of life and has unimaginable destructive potential. Network animation series is absolutely gorgeous, with deep greens and soft yellow, but the writing is unfortunate. Legends of Chima will appeal to young people who are not worried about complex conspiracies and sophisticated dialogue. See also: Read the full review of Legends of Chima 'Mixels'. Cartoon Network /LEGO Mixels is a new animated series by LEGO, which premiered on Cartoon Network on February 12, 2014. Mixels focus on a world of colorful creatures who can mix and come together, just like video games. The characters fall into three different categories, or tribes, based on a personality characteristic. Infernites live in magma wasteland near the planet's core. They are kind of heroic, bumbling type, and really handy for a barbecue. Vulk, Zorch and Flain are Infernites. Cragsters are miners who live in many tunnels and caves they have dug deep beneath the surface of the world. They smash, they dig, and they're great to have around unless you have a lot of nice Chinese. Krader, Seismo and Shuff are Cragsters. Electroids live high in mountain forests to stay close to the lightning storms that inscide them. Teslo, Zaptor and Volectro are Electroids. These three tribes were the first wave of characters released by Lego. Two more waves are expected. LEGO Batman. Cartoon Network/Warner Bros. Cartoon Network airs LEGO DC Comics: Batman: Be-Leaguered as a halloween special for 2014. Loner Batman is busy cleaning up the streets of Gotham when Superman interrupts to beg him to join justice league. Batman flatly refuses. As Superman flies away, frustrated, he is overcome with a strange energy, and disappears! Now Batman must work with members of JL to find The Man of Steel. He teamed up with The Flash and their search led them to the evil Captain Cold, who was busy stealing an artifact in Egypt. Now Batman has turned to Aquaman, Wonder Woman and Cyborg (other members of the Justice League) for help. But one by one they also disappeared. It's up to Batman to rescue the very team he rejected. See also: 11 Cartoons Perfect for Binge-Watching American Horror Story creator Ryan Murphy seems to have revived the tv series as a popular entertainment genre, as popular series like Fargo and True Detective have emerged after the horror show a story each season. These series tell seasonal stories, a slightly new form of television set, separate from the classical structure - a story, an episode. For the sake of remembering tv history and rediscovering a few classics, let's take a look back at a few of the great set dramas. It should be noted that, for whatever reason, the set series is very supportive of the horror genre. 1. Twilight Zone Let's get clear out of the way. Decades after its original broadcast date in 1959, The Twilight Zone still holds up as one of the greatest achievements in science fiction and television history, a series Negative was founded on breakthrough twists and smart social commentary. The film's 'movie' The brilliance is due mainly to author and host Rod Serling, who has written a whopping 96 of the show's 152 episodes, imbued most people with a sense of political awareness that speaks to the late 50s and early 60s elect not dating itself (for the most part). 2. Charlie Brooker's Black Mirror British TV series Black Mirror feels something like an update of The Twilight Zone for an era of sobering digital and television equipment. The hour-long episode gives the characters and story room to breathe, allowing Brooker to craft stories that work even beyond their social significance. Most episodes are spectacularly depressing and deal with the human collateral of an era of popular electronics and digital dependence. In the third episode, a series of highlights, a man self-destructs and destroys his relationship mainly by using an implant device for a person's eyes that allows him to view his memories as running again. The sad humanity of men's self-destruction and oddly justiable technology make the episode an instant classic science fiction, just like the entire series. 3. The Outer Limits Original (and Premium) version of The Outer Limits aired simultaneously with multiple seasons of The Twilight Zone, and it's easy to see how the two series could have been confused. In fact, there are a few important differences, as The Outer Limits leans more into science fiction than parables and earlier novels. The textured cinematography gave the series a unique feel, especially at a time when most televisions were mostly artless in the direction, and the stories were both compelling and often existentially scary. The show is great, but it deserves a place here if only for the iconic showcase alone. 4. Alfred Hitchcock Presents The famous master of suspense brings his sinister obsession and eyes to the unease to television with this episode series, in which Hitchcock himself will present each episode with a dark comedy, droll monotony that sets the tone for anything creepy , crime center story was told in the episode. Episodes often have little in common other than fear and intrigue. However, Hitchcock's sensitivity has been well represented here, and it should be considered the highest honor to say that the film feels like a worthy extension of his cinematic work. 5. Tales from the Crypt Tales from the Crypt announce its tone and intentions at the beginning of each episode, when the crumbling and gleefully demented corpse called The Cryptkeeper will greet the viewer using a deliberately contrived pun. The juxtaposition is funny but scary, like the episodes themselves, which benefit from being shown on HBO - writers can craft great horror because they can go any direction they want and use as much sex, gore, and vulgarity as the story deserves. 6. Tim and Eric's Bedtime Stories Tim Heidecker and Eric Wareheim are two of the most unique voices in comedy today, and their creations that silly synthesizer and a deliberately low-budget aesthetic – always funny and strangely disturbing, so branching their off into horror comedies hardly feels unexpected. Their Bedtime Stories series remain faithful to their anotic spirit, with 11-minute stories that will make most viewers feel confused about whether they should laugh or startle in horror. There is really no way to describe the difficult series, which pushes its concising format into odd new territories.
